Mike-

Just read your message on Jambo97 re scouts in DC. I agree with you; in truth, I would be more forceful than you.

There seem to be so many "crazies" and predators in DC these days that I will not let my scouts go anywhere in DC without an adult. This is what I also tell out of town visitors and friends.

Keep up the good work, Mike.

Subject: Re: Looking for Lodging enroute to Jamboree

A couple of weeks back David asked about lodging in the Williamsburg, Virginia area.

A few suggestions:

Write to or call The College of William and Mary. They may be able to arrange for some dormitory rooms.

The College of William & Mary
P.O. Box 8795
Williamsburg, VA 23187-8795
(804) 221-4000

Try visiting <http://www.williamsburg.com/wol/tour/hotels/hotels.html> for more information about local inns and hotels. This site offers a comprehensive listing of local lodgings and the numbers of rooms in each. Some may offer cut-rate deals. Phone numbers and other information is provided for each one. Also if you visit the home page at <http://www.williamsburg.com> you can link to information on Busch Gardens and the Water Park, Jamestown, Yorktown, etc.

You can also learn a bit about Colonial Williamsburg by visiting <http://www.history.org/> or calling 1-800-HISTORY (useful information for planning a tour of Colonial Williamsburg)

Another useful Website is <http://www.wmbg.com/its/tne/index.html> - it has information on tours, attractions, events, beaches, parks, and other things in the Williamsburg area.

And for your Scout web-surfers - take a look at this site for information on the Coasters at Busch Gardens: <http://www.fmci.com/mlong/bgo/bgo.html>

For more information about Williamsburg, please write to:

Williamsburg Area Convention and Visitors Bureau

Subject: JAMBO97 Tours - Parts 1-4: Disclaimer - Safety Considerations

My four postings to this discussion group entitled JAMBO97 Tours - Part 1 through JAMBO97 Tours - Part 4 were provided for informational purposes only and do not constitute an endorsement of any of the listed attractions. The listing provided is not inclusive of all possible sites and the absence of one or more sites is not intended to convey any negative connotations. Only attractions listed in Web Pages with additional information were included.

Scouters planning tours are advised to consider the safety of Scouts and to be aware of the generally hot and humid conditions to be expected in Virginia before, during and after the National Jamboree. As you plan your tour, please take into account the need for frequent fluid intake and rest.

If you are staying in a hotel or motel, check to make sure that it has fire alarms and smoke detectors.

If you are using a commercial tour service, it doesn't hurt to ask about their safety record or any special considerations you may need to know.

Wherever you are touring, always have a plan for what to do, if a Scout becomes separated from the group. Use the buddy system ashore. :-)

Make your arrangements well in advance. With 30,000+ Scouts and Scouters descending on the area, many attractions will be crowded and some may fill up with advanced reservations months before the tour.

Above all make sure that while you are trying to provide your Scouts with an opportunity to have an educational and fun tour, that your adult leadership and PLC keep safety first and foremost in mind.

Subject: JAMBO97 Tours - Part 5 (Historic Trails)

A few weeks ago there was a request for information on historic trails in the Northern Virginia area that might be used by touring contingents. Not having the information to hand to give a good reply, I did the next best thing - used my resources and asked local Scouters on our local list to help. Well help came quickly with a listing of some of the trails in the area. As more information comes my way, I'll pass it on. Please see the forwarded message for more information.

NCAC Service Center in Bethesda, MD, has info on these:

There is a National Capital Lincoln Trail, with hiking from Ford's Theatre, to the House Where Lincoln Died, to the church where Lincoln worshipped (Emancipation Proclamation memorabilia there), to the White House, the National Museum of American History, and then to the Lincoln Memorial, where it ends for Cub Scouts. For Webelos & Boy Scouts, they continue to Takoma Park, MD, to a small cemetery for Union soldiers.

There's also a Washington & Lee Trail in Alexandria, with the trail going on to Mount Vernon.

Mount Vernon has info on these:

At Mount Vernon, in addition to the trail there is an opportunity (by reservation) to lay a homemade wreath at Washington's Tomb (there's a tomb pin), to earn a pin for reading a book from the official reading list, and to get a patch for one or two surveying activities (the tougher one includes measuring elevation). Contact Mount Vernon and ask for the educational office for details. The patches and pins are purchased in the gift shop.

Subject: Re: JAMBO97 JamboHint#4

Dave,

Although I have some concerns about JamboHint #4, I think it is an excellent idea to trade hints on how to make the Jamboree experience better for the Scouts and those of us who will be on site. Thanks for offering the hints and getting the ball rolling.

My concerns with the "Rule of Four" come from living in the DC Metro area and seeing both the good and bad side of thousands of touring groups in the area. And by far, the Scouts on tour before or after a National Jamboree are the best behaved of the many groups. Very few Scouts got into trouble while touring here.

During the last National Jamboree a very few youth visiting at the same time (unknown whether they were Scouts) got into some trouble on their own in one of the major Smithsonian Museums and the reaction was predictably bureaucratic and slow. A few months later, the rule went out that touring youth groups had to have pre-arranged permission to enter the facility after checks to assure proper leadership, form shuffling, etc. Several Scout units were turned away even with leaders present. Popular outrage sufficed to turn the tide and things returned to normal. This did not affect Jambo93 tours, but did affect some local Scout units.

An additional concern is the changes that have taken place in DC over the last ten years in terms of crimes against people as opposed to property. The amount of crime has more than doubled. And while the main areas around the monuments and museums are mostly safe during daylight, the amount of crime there has increased too.

When you last visited the mall had hundreds of push-carts and kiosks serving up hot dogs, soda, etc. The Park Service has cleaned up the area and these are now history. This means that visitors who want refreshment must venture away from the Mall and this is where trouble can ensue. The areas around the Mall are generally occupied by federal buildings meaning that it takes a little exploration and walking to get to someplace to get a soda and dog or face long lines in the Museums.

I realize that the practice in the past has been to use small groups of Scouts to allow more flexibility. In the future, it may be wise for groups to think hard about this. For some groups there will never be a problem. But looking at it from my perspective, I guess I am concerned about all of the groups.

When I moved here in 1985 I felt things were relatively safe and was fairly comfortable moving around the area at will. That was four unsuccessful daylight assaults and one attempted shooting ago. Imagine the explaining I had to do when I turned in a leased car and had to explain the bullet hole in the door post just behind my head. That happened in daylight - either a stray or a random act of violence - I'll never know. I can also recall taking Cubs downtown with other leaders and having to go past the scene of a grisly shooting on the way. Two of the lawyers that work for me have had friends killed in NW DC and another had a friend killed three blocks from the Capital. Even across the river in Crystal City where I work we've had cars broken into in the parking garage, cars stolen, and attempted car-jacking against employees. I don't want to unnecessarily fan the fires of fear, but I do want to make the point that DC is not as placid as it looks on the surface.

Please don't get me wrong - I'm not suggesting that groups avoid DC. What I am concerned about is lots of youth on their own where the temptation to get outside the relatively safe areas may be irresistible to a few and expose them to potential problems.

There are a lot of great things to see and much to do that is worthwhile in the DC metropolitan area. And I think it important that Scouts visit their nation's capital. What I would like is for that visit to minimize any chance for a problem.

You also have to remember that you are a guest and that many of the places you visit may have rules regarding tour groups. Some of the places you may want to visit may prohibit unaccompanied youth outright, some have other restrictions.

We should also remember that while on tour our Scouts are very visible. It may take only a single incident at a place to ruin it for other Scouts. Consider this scenario:

Contingent leaders take groups to tour three different museums. Five of the older guys want to see a different museum. Contingent Leader (CL) says okay, just meet us at this spot at 4 pm. They go off and after awhile a couple of the guys are a little bored and notice that one guy is really deeply entranced by the exhibits to the point he isn't aware where the other guys are all the time. Well they decided to play a prank and sneak off to see what he will do when he figures out he's alone. Well he doesn't notice right away so the other four guys start telling jokes and ribbing each other, not paying much attention. Next thing you know their buddy is nowhere to be seen. They start looking but can't find him. Finally they explain their problem to a museum guard, who reports the lost Scout. In the meantime the "lost Scout" figures his pals have left to meet the rest of the Troop. He leaves the building, but goes out the wrong side towards the street. Outside he is panhandled by a desperate looking fellow and scared runs off. As he looks over his shoulder to see whether the "bad guy is following him" he bumps into a passerby, knocking him down. This guy is a bit irked and throws the Scout to the ground. A passing police car with an alert officer spots the scene and intervenes. The Scout is taken with the other fellow to the station for questioning. In the meantime the Troop has assembled and the museum folks are going nuts trying to find the lost Scout with several staying after hours looking through the building. After a few hours the Scout is reunited and all explained. The next morning's paper has a story about an unsupervised Scout left to wander on his own getting into a fight and being hauled off to the police station with an editorial on the poor quality of Scout leadership. The museum director fearful of legal ramifications calls a halt to Scouts visiting the museum. Mom and Dad get wind of the fact that their son made the newspaper. Now the fun begins.

Yeah, it probably wouldn't happen like that, but then again it might. What position would this put the leader in, if the boy were injured?

Under our current two-deep leadership rules, the only exception is for patrol activities in the home troop. I'm not sure there is a similar exception for touring groups to allow small groups to wander off. With these rules, if anything happens to a Scout the leader may be found negligent and unless BSA has approved this sort of splitting-off, there is a possibility that BSA might have trouble covering an unapproved activity, leaving the liability squarely in the lap of the leader.

For most contingents this probably is pretty remote possibility, because the Scouts for the most part are very well behaved and do a pretty good job of following directions. But this is one of those situations where it only takes one ugly incident to ruin things for the rest.

Now ask me how I really feel about this. :-))) Sorry for the long post.

Dave,

Your words "'trained' our Scouts for the experience" are very important. Just as we train our Scouts to be able set up camp, to pack the right stuff, and the like, maybe part of the shakedown experience should include a short session on "Tour Survival Skills" presented by a local law enforcement officer involved with Scouting. Bob Amick mentioned a few months back that they used a Deputy Sheriff who talked to Scouts about how to avoid trouble on a trip and be less vulnerable. From what I recall he explained about people, like pickpockets, that prey on tourists and how to avoid be victimized. Maybe Bob can tell us more. A short course on "street sense" or "urban survival" might be a way of seeing that Scouts from smaller communities get a good grounding on how to deal with the kind environment presented by a larger city.

Dear Friends in Scouting,

The following "Guidelines for Visiting the Jamboree" appeared in the current (Spring 1997) "Scouter Digest," a newspaper of my Council, the National Capital Area Council (NCAC) in Washington DC. NCAC is the Host Council for the National Jamboree, and as such we will have many visitors to the Jamboree site from our metropolitan area and especially from our Scout troops.

I pass this information along to all of you as a Good Turn for the benefit of all Jamboree visitors. Please note especially the information about required tour permits, participation restrictions, the requirement for adults to accompany all youth visitors at all times, and the health and safety notes.

Thanks for your interest; please feel free to re-post elsewhere and/or forward.

Yours in the spirit of Scouting,

GUIDELINES FOR VISITING THE JAMBOREE

Units planning to visit the 1997 National Scout Jamboree are alerted to the following guidelines

VISITATION DAYS AND TIMES:

The Jamboree is open to visitors every day beginning Wednesday, July 30 through Tuesday, August 5. Visiting hours are from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Visitors will be permitted to stay until 11 p.m. on arena show days.

INSURANCE AND TOUR PERMITS:

All Scout units or groups visiting the Jamboree must have the required insurance as indicated on the tour permit forms and must apply for a local tour permit from their local council (travel of under 500 miles) or a national tour permit (travel of over 500 miles) before April 30, 1997.

PARKING AND RECEPTION:

Once you're in Fort A.P. Hill, follow the signs to the visitors parking area. Visitors and guests will be directed to the Visitors Information Center adjacent to the visitors parking lot. Here they will receive visitor guidelines, locator assistance, directions, maps and other services.

Parking for persons with disabilities will be available for those with valid appropriate parking designations. Bus transportation will be available around the periphery of the Jamboree. Special transportation for those with mobility devices for persons with disabilities will be available via phone at the visitors parking lot.

VISIT DURATION AND PARTICIPATION RESTRICTIONS:

The Jamboree is anxious that all visitors have an enjoyable experience. Visiting units must limit their stay to one day at the Jamboree site. The purpose of a visit should be to enable Cubs, Scouts, Explorers, Scouters, and other visitors to catch the spirit of our National and International brotherhood.

Visiting youth and adults including registered members of the Boy Scouts of America may not participate in any program feature or activities or in any way interfere with official Jamboree participants and staff participating in or carrying out the program or activities of the Jamboree. Visitors are encouraged to observe these activities and may only participate at the Merit Badge Midway and exhibit areas. Visiting chartered units and other groups of youth visiting the Jamboree must have adult leadership accompanying the youth at all times during their visit to the Jamboree. At no time should any visiting youth members be permitted to roam freely about the Jamboree grounds without adult supervision.

HEALTH AND SAFETY CONCERNS:

Because the August weather in Virginia is very hot and humid, and long walks are required between Jamboree locations, visitors to the Jamboree should be in very good physical condition. Also there are very few shaded areas, consequently, use of sun screen, headgear and a canteen-type container for water are strongly recommended. Good walking shoes are necessary. Persons with disabilities and conditions which could be adversely impacted by the extreme conditions and long walks should exercise prudent judgment about attending the Jamboree.

Skateboards, roller skates, and inline skates are prohibited. Helmets must be worn by bicyclists. Only official motor vehicles are permitted on the site.

MEDICAL SUPPORT:

Visitors to the Jamboree can receive first aid at any number of medical centers. A special medical center near the Visitors Information Center will be the primary care center for visitors' medical care.

TRADING POSTS:

Large trading post tents are strategically located on the Jamboree grounds. Each of these trading posts will feature a VISITORS ONLY section. Souvenirs, Scout items, and food will be available at reasonable prices.

PATCH AND SOUVENIR TRADING:

All adults (18 years or older) including visitors and participants (staff included) will not be permitted to conduct any selling, trading, or buying of Scouting patches, memorabilia, souvenirs, or clothing with youth members of the Boy Scouts of America before, during, or after the Jamboree. Adults must deal only with other adults and youths must deal only with other youths.

MILITARY POLICE AND MILITARY PERSONNEL:

Many civilians mistakenly believe that the military police have no jurisdiction over them even though they are on government property. Military police should be treated exactly as if they were regular police, constables, or sheriffs.

Fort A.P. Hill is a military installation and is under the jurisdiction of military police (MP). Military police exercise the same jurisdiction as a US Marshall.

All adult leaders, staff members, youth participants, and visitors must obey military police instructions in traffic, safety, crowd control, parking, and directions. Do not argue or have a confrontation with the military police. If you have a complaint or concern about actions or directions given by the military police or military personnel you should inform the Visitors Information Center as soon as possible after the incident.

Observe all speed limits, and be careful of pedestrian traffic at all times in all locations within the boundaries of Fort A.P. Hill. The military police and military personnel are performing their assigned duty in support of the Jamboree. Many of them are BSA volunteers and were youth members in Scouting programs. Remember, a Scout is courteous.

HIGHLIGHTS:

The Jamboree is one gigantic kaleidoscope with action everywhere. These suggestions may be helpful:

The Boys' Life Jamboree Guidebook will help you find your way to the many Jamboree activities.

Arts and Science Expo - An intriguing potpourri of exhibits focusing on the myriad of interests that capture the attention of youth. Awards are given to winning exhibits.

Merit Badge Midway - See merit badge themes come to life. You, too, can participate.

Brownsea Island - See for yourself how Victorian-age English boys talked, dressed, camped and practiced a new game called Scouting on Brownsea Island in 1908.

Arena Shows - The opening and closing arena shows will present professional entertainers as well as other musical groups. A gigantic fireworks show will conclude the final show.

As a visitor you are welcome to WATCH the Scouts in action. Many of their activities will occur in the four Action Centers.

Nearest town to the Jambo site is Bowling Green in Caroline County. The local chamber of commerce lists 2 places:
1) Webbs Motel - phone (804)633-6755
2) Mansion View Bed & Breakfast - phone (800)251-9335

The nearest cities are Fredericksburg (~20 miles North) and Ashland (~20 miles South) Both have hotel/motel accommodations provided by the large national chains such as Holiday Inn, Hilton, and Best Western to name a few. You could try their toll-free 800 number reservation services (or websites).

Additional resources include:
Fredericksburg Chamber of Commerce - phone (540)786-7080
Ashland Chamber of Commerce - phone (804)798-1722
